Release Date: Février 6, 2018

Take Control of Recovery

ORLANDO, Fla. – Hurricane Irma survivors should continually work to return home since FEMA housing help is only temporary.

Federal disaster help with hotel stays, rental assistance, travel trailers and FEMA-paid apartments are just short-term solutions for survivors who are working to return home. This includes repairing or rebuilding their hurricane-damaged home or relocating to another long-term residence.

Hurricane Irma survivors who are getting FEMA help have many resources in Florida to support their recovery goals and move back home. Possible help with long-term housing plans includes:

- Calling the FEMA help line at 800-621-3362 or TTY 800-462-7585.
- Those who are working with FEMA case managers should contact them for guidance on developing realistic housing plans.
- Calling 2-1-1 to connect with volunteer agencies that may help.
- Going online to FloridaHousingSearch.org to find available housing.
- Going online to www.hud.gov/program_offices/housing/sfh/lender/lenderlist to search the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development for lenders that may help provide finances to rebuild a home. They may also call HUD at 800-569-4287 or TTY 800-877-8339.

FEMA's mission is to support our citizens and first responders to ensure that as a nation we work together to build, sustain, and improve our capability to prepare for, protect against, respond to, recover from, and mitigate all hazards.
