Rumor: If you already paid for repairs or if you have insurance, FEMA won't help you

False. FEMA may be able to reimburse you for the cost of repairs you made. FEMA may also be able to help if your damages were not fully covered by insurance. It's best to visit the Disaster Recovery Center to talk with a FEMA specialist to see if FEMA can help.

Rumor: If you live off the reservation FEMA won't help you

False. Any Crow Tribe member who had damage caused by the August 6 severe storm, living on or off the reservation, can apply for disaster assistance. This includes tribal members living in Lockwood, Hardin and other locations off the reservation.

Rumor: If your home is unlivable, you can't apply for disaster assistance

False. Crow Tribe members with homes that are unlivable because of damage from the August 6 severe storm should apply as soon as possible for disaster assistance. Rumor: A denial letter means there is no chance for FEMA help

False. The first letter you get from FEMA may appear to be a denial or say you're ineligible, but read the letter closely. Often it is only because information or a required document is still needed from you to move your application forward. FEMA can also help you with an appeal. So don't give up, bring your letter to the Disaster Recovery Center so that we can see what the next steps are to help you.

Rumor: FEMA help takes a long time and can be a process that takes several steps

True. Disaster assistance is process with several steps along the way [see below]. There is often a FEMA letter that says an applicant is ineligible or denied – but only temporarily because more information or a document is needed. FEMA specialists will work with you every step along the way, including steps to take if more information is needed.

Example of the FEMA Process

Your journey applying for disaster assistance with FEMA might look something like the steps below.

Step 1: Apply for assistance! Come into the Disaster Recovery Center and talk with a FEMA specialist.

Step 2: Schedule an inspection. A FEMA inspector and Tribal Guide will call to make an appointment to come out and see the damage. The call may come from an out of state or 'unknown' number.

Step 3: Keep your appointment with the inspector. The damage inspection will take about an hour.

Step 4: Read your FEMA letter. You will get a letter from FEMA that may say you are ineligible. It doesn't mean you won't get assistance, it may mean that we need more information or other documents to keep your application moving forward.

Step 5: Bring your letter back to the Disaster Recovery Center with any other needed information, such as proof of occupancy, receipts for repairs already made, a contractor's estimate or other information noted in your FEMA letter.

Step 6: Stay in touch. FEMA may call you to stay in touch. Come to the Disaster Recovery Center with questions.
