WASHINGTON -- FEMA's Ready Campaign and the Ad Council joined with Sony Pictures and their new film, "Ghostbusters: Afterlife" to promote the critical message of emergency preparedness.

"We recently launched this new partnership to help remind communities whether it's a ghost encounter or a natural disaster, it helps to be prepared," said FEMA Administrator Deanne Criswell. "Make sure you're ready for emergencies, from specters to wildfires, by visiting Ready.gov/Plan."

In "Ghostbusters: Afterlife," when a single mom and her two kids arrive in a small town, they begin to discover their connection to the original Ghostbusters and the secret legacy their grandfather left behind. The PSA video and promotional posters feature the film's cast in key movie scenes depicting what families should do now to prepare for disasters with the theme, "Ghosts don't plan ahead, but you can. Make your emergency plan."

Beginning this month, the TV PSAs will air in donated media throughout the country. Networks can download advertisements from the Ad Council's website.
