FEMA Mobile Disaster Centers Reach Out to Help Rural Residents

Release Date: July 19, 2017

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. – Most people associate the use of motor homes with recreational life—accessing parks, lakes and other scenic areas to reduce the stress of the daily grind.

FEMA maintains a national fleet of similar vehicles it rolls out for a different purpose—to reduce the stress on rural residents recovering from natural disasters. Their technical name is Mobile Communications Operations Vehicle, or MCOV. As such, they often are used as command vehicles in various response or recovery situations.

Where federal disasters are declared, MCOVs become Mobile Disaster Recovery Centers (MDRCs).

FEMA stages MCOVs in three major locations: Texas, Georgia and Virginia. MCOVs can be in a disaster area within a day or two of a federal declaration. FEMA drivers are deployed to vehicle locations while the vehicles are double-checked for operation.

Equipped with satellite technology, MCOVs are used as MDRCs because they can go anywhere a motor home can to register applicants for federal disaster assistance. Able to house 10 FEMA computers and a number of others for FEMA's disaster recovery partners, they reach out as circuit riders to visit small communities where there might not even be a building big enough to use for a disaster center.

Disaster survivors do not go into the MCOV, as it is basically a command center for the MDRC. Equipment is deployed out of it into a building or onto a few tables under awnings in a parking lot in a rural community. Centers are always accessible to people who have disabilities or additional communication needs.

MDRC schedules are announced and disaster survivors are welcomed, FEMA applicant services specialists and SBA customer service representatives assist disaster survivors to apply for FEMA grants and/or the SBA's low-interest loans. Representatives also make referrals to voluntary organizations active in disasters and others with information on mitigating risks in future disasters.

Survivors who are not fully insured may qualify for assistance from FEMA and/or SBA. FEMA grants are limited to temporary assistance aimed at getting disaster survivors into a safe, functional place to live. For fuller recovery, SBA offers low-interest disaster loans to business of all sizes, most private nonprofit organizations, homeowners and renters.

SBA disaster loans are the primary source of money to pay for repair or replacement costs not fully covered by insurance or other compensation. Homeowners may borrow up to $200,000 to repair or replace their primary residence. Homeowners and renters may borrow up to $40,000 to replace personal property.

Businesses may borrow up to $2 million for any combination of property damage or economic injury. SBA also offers low-interest working capital loans (called Economic Injury Disaster Loans) to small businesses, small businesses engaged in aquaculture and most private nonprofit organizations of all sizes having difficulty meeting obligations as a result of the disaster.
