

Youth: The Key to Building a Culture of Preparedness

Sarah Thompson

Director, U.S. Emergencies,
Save the Children

Sarah Thompson is the Director of U.S. Emergencies for Save the Children where she leads emergency preparedness, recovery and psychosocial programming.

In addition to developing a robust training library that help caregivers prepare for, respond to and recover from disasters, Sarah is the author of the Prep Rally curriculum, an innovative program that teaches children preparedness skills through play and has reached more than 100,000 children and won the 2017 FEMA Community Preparedness Award. Sarah also manages national partnerships in building momentum around youth preparedness and recovery, including leading Save the Children's support for the National Strategy for Youth Preparedness Education and as chair of the National Voluntary Organizations Active in Disaster Preparedness Committee. Sarah holds a Masters in Health Communications from Johns Hopkins University and is a Certified Emergency Manager.
