

Claims Office Partners with Mora Cooperative Extension Service to Support Agricultural Producers at Resource Fair in Mora on July 18

Release Date: Tháng 7 15, 2024

SANTA FE, NM – The FEMA Hermit's Peak/Calf Canyon Claims Office Advocate Team and New Mexico State University's Mora Cooperative Extension Service are co-hosting an agricultural resilience resource fair to address post-disaster challenges, on Thursday, July 18, from 10 a.m. - 4 p.m., at the Mora VFW.

Claims Office staff will be on hand to process agricultural claims during the panel discussions. Assistance with non-agricultural claims will be available including accepting new claims, uploading documents and claim status checks.

Subject matter experts from partnering state and federal agencies will address agricultural and environmental impacts resulting from the fire and floods, such as the loss of grazing land and water contamination. The state veterinarian is also expected to provide critical insights on these and other issues.

“Partnering with key agencies enable us to continue to connect impacted claimants with valuable resources and enables us to better understand our agricultural community recovery needs, which is integral to the economic recovery of these communities,” said Jay Mitchell, New Mexico Joint Recovery Office Director of Operations.

“By bringing together these specialists, we aim to equip our agricultural community with the knowledge and resources needed to navigate these challenging times,” said Christian Turner, Northern Regional Director of Extension.
